

GUIDE

Head Lunge

A competitive display in which the whale lunges forward with its head raised above the water.

Tail Slap

Whale slaps water surface with its tail flukes, creating a loud sound that may be heard for miles.

PHOTO TIPS

Whether you're a professional photojournalist or using your cell phone camera, here's how to capture some memorable photos:

- Use a fast shutter speed to keep images clear. Select outdoor/sports settings on your camera, if available.
- Use a non-zoom lens setting while looking for whales. Once you've spotted a whale, keep it in your viewfinder while zooming in.
- Look for water blowing high into the air! It means a whale has just surfaced.
- Took a great photo? Share it on Instagram and Facebook with #SOHWhaleWatch and #StarofHonolulu.

WHALE WATCH CRUISE

WHALE WATCHING

Blow

Blows may reach 20' high and be heard 800' away as whale resurfaces every 10-15 minutes.

Breach

Whale launches itself into the air with its powerful tail. Its 30 tons create a huge splash.

Round Out

"Humping" of the back as whale begins a deep dive. Origin of Humpback whale's name.

Pec Slap

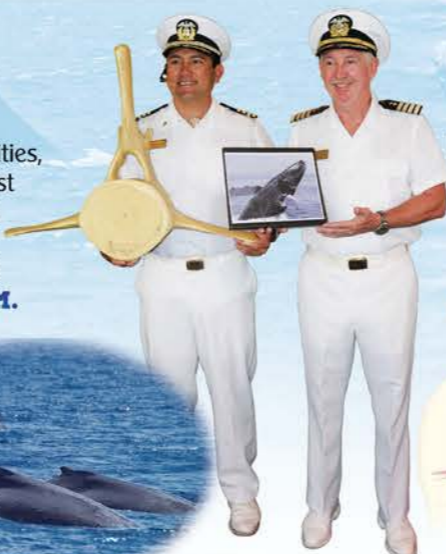

Rolling on its side, whale slowly slaps water with pectoral fin to communicate with other whales.
